ABSTRACT

The 283 materials cited in this bibliography are chiefly on Chicanas in the United States. However, books or articles that discuss Mexicanas or women in general and can be related to the experiences of Chicanas are also cited. Areas covered include the arts, education, sociology, economics, history, health, and literature. The materials are principally from the late sixties to 1976, although earlier publications are cited. Part I contains articles, student papers, dissertations, books, and documents pertaining to la mujer. Part II contains serials that are specifically about Chicanas, Mexicanas and women in general, or contain a variety of articles relevant to Chicanas. Both sections are arranged in alphabetical order by authors. A subject index is included. The items in this bibliography are available in the Chicano Studies Library's collection; full bibliographic information is given to help the user locate the material. (RC)

INTRODUCTION

The Chicana has suffered the oppression that occurs when one is not only a woman but a minority woman. Many mujeres find themselves in roles which force them to suppress their own needs and desires and thus stagnates their creative abilities. Many times when a mujer tries to express her hopes and aspirations through literature, she becomes a threat to her own Raza simply because she's taken more of an assertive role. The result of this oppression has been that material written by and about Chicanas is limited and often difficult to locate. With the emergence of different social movements concerning civil rights and women's liberation, there has developed a need for minority women and in particular Chicanas, to redefine their roles as mujeres and re-educate their people in order to dispell the myth of the submissive woman. This re-education has been taking place through the writings of many Chicanas. The main problem has been these materials are inaccessible which thus places a limitation on research in this area.

The Chicano Studies Library has a collection of catalogued materials on Chicanas which are interdisciplinary and located in different places throughout the Library. These materials needed to be synthesized into a structured bibliography. The creation of this bibliography has hopefully made this material more readily available to the researcher. The material covered in this bibliography mainly deals with Chicanas in the United States. Where there was a particular book or article that discussed Mexicanas or women in general and could be related to the experiences of Chicanas, it was included. The bibliography is arranged alphabetically by authors and has an index covering a wide range of areas so that the researcher has more of a selection from which to choose. There are two parts within the bibliography: Part I containing reprinted articles, student papers, dissertations and books pertaining to la mujer; Part II contains serials that deal specifically with Chicanas, Mexicanas, and women in general. The materials collected on Chicanas are far from complete. The Library is continually researching different sources in order to obtain more materials on Chicanas. This bibliography is thus representative of holdings as of this date.
